Benjamin Lawrence, an English student, is looking to create a website for a literary magazine he is founding to showcase students' creative work. The magazine will be a collaborative work of students to practice editing and publishing. Plans to officially start the magazine are in place for Fall 2019. The website will be an ongoing project to update and maintain for the coming years.

Objectives:

Have a front page that showcases new articles and works.

An archive of past works.

Custom styling and images for each article.

Useable on mobile.

Business Benefits:

The magazine has a modular exterior but has room to make styling choices within articles. The front page gives users a call to action to view new stories. The submit page will oneday allow students to submit work online. The navigation is easily done through the top menu.

Business Evaluation (Benjamin Lawrence):

TRU Literature Magazine Evaluation

1. How do you feel about current version of the website?

I think it is a fantastic start. The stories, which are the main component and what everybody will be coming to see, are presented in a esthetically pleasing manner and they are easy to find. The graphics used fit the content. The site needs some polish to smooth out a few of the rough edges. There are links that do not go anywhere and the about us and submit pages need format and structural modifications. Generally though, I think it is solid site that does the job required of it.

2. What improvements would you like to see?

Other than the minor improvements that I mentioned above, it would be nice to see an author bio section added, just to add a personal touch to the stories themselves.

3. How do you feel about the communication between the developers and the client?

The developer was communicative and was constantly look for feedback. I found that Shane was on top of the project and gave me updates as they happened. He was able to answer any questions I had immediately.

4. Are you satisfied with the current progress?

Absolutely. This is actually far beyond what I expected.

5. Any additional comments?

No.
